New Propane Technologies – Growing Gallons in a Challenging Economy

Propane companies must look beyond the traditional markets to find new gallons to grow and thrive in a difficult economy. In this presentation, marketers will learn more about new technologies and how to sell these technologies to customers who may only think of propane for heating, cooking, or forklifts. We'll hear from TempAir on using propane heat for pest eradication, learn about generators from Generac, and find out how Origin Engines and KEM Equipment are developing new heavy-duty propane engines for irrigation and other applications. And with air regulations getting tougher in many urban areas, discover how propane commercial mowers offer environmental and economic benefits. Finally, learn about how the Propane Education & Research Council's Propane Challenge is looking for new ways to deliver and use propane – and how your idea could be the breakthrough the industry's been waiting for.

Moderator:

Dr. Steven Wayne is chief commercial officer of the Propane Education & Research Council in Washington, DC, where he guides the commercialization efforts of the propane industry's research and development activities. Before joining PERC, Steve was CEO of Advanced Heat Transfer LLC, a Lennox International division, where he oversaw new product development. Steve is the co-inventor on eight patents and has co-authored a book and more than 50 technical publications related to materials science and engineering.

Go back to your office and get online – it's where your customers are looking for you.
